

I will be very unhappy if the FCC replaces Indiana's Telephone Privacy Law with one which is less effective. To allow companies of whom I have previously been a customer to call me is not okay. For example, before our law was in effect, I received no less than 4 calls one Saturday morning from MCI--1 per hour beginning at eight o'clock in the morning. It only stopped when I demanded to speak to a supervisor and insisted I be taken off their list. I am a previous customer of theirs, but consider that nothing less than harassment and what you are proposing would allow this to happen again. Indiana's law has made my home time much more pleasant. When the phone rings, I can be assured that it is someone I want to talk to.
